[Partial ophthalmoplegia as initial symptom of cerebral autosomal dominant arteriopathy with subcortical infarcts and leukoencephalopathy]. A 14-year-old girl presented with partial ophthalmoplegia. Brain magnetic resonance imaging revealed subcortical white matter lesions and posterior cortical atrophy. The symptoms progressed over two years and were associated with prominent memory impairment. Brain magnetic resonance angiography revealed stenoses and occlusions of the posterior cerebral artery as well as small infarcts in the middle and anterior temporal cortices. Cerebral autosomal dominant arteriopathy with subcortical infarcts and leukoencephalopathy (CADASIL) was suspected based on clinical and genetic findings. Genetic analysis revealed a point mutation in the Notch 3 gene, which is typical for CADASIL. Ophthalmoplegia is a common symptom of CADASIL, but is usually followed by a wide range of neurological symptoms. Therefore, clinicians must be aware of this rare but treatable disease.
